Socialbooth: the mission says emotion. The homepage says results.

Spec project, not a client engagement · public material only · past affiliation disclosed: I worked at Socialbooth before founding Studio Dudin · source: studiodudin.com/case-study-socialbooth.html (published, checkable)

THE FINDING

Socialbooth is a company built on play and emotion, selling itself with the same results language as every competitor in its category. Its proof is genuinely strong: 51 Trustpilot reviews at 4.8, 70+ published case histories, national press. Its mission, vision, Trustpilot bio and even the smile inside the logo all say the same thing: people come alive when they play. But the homepage leads with the words a direct competitor uses almost verbatim. The fix is not a new idea: it is moving the idea they already have to the place where buyers decide.

What the homepage leads with > "Trasformiamo eventi e fiere in spazi che attirano persone, le coinvolgono e generano risultati." — attract, engage, generate results. Dwell time, shareable content, real leads. True of every serious competitor.

What the company says it is for

> "Our mission is BRING EMOTION TO LIFE." — on the Società Benefit page, one the buyer never opens. Same page: "il gioco crea emozioni, relazioni e fa sentire vivi." The Trustpilot bio, the logo smile, the customer reviews: all the emotion, none of the front door.

SCORECARD

PROOF & CREDIBILITY	STRONG	4.8 Trustpilot (51 reviews), 70+ case histories, press
DIFFERENTIATION	WEAK	lead message shared word-for-word with a competitor
MESSAGE CONSISTENCY	WEAK	two languages, two spellings, two visual systems
OFFER CLARITY	MIXED	28 products chosen by catalogue, against the company's own advice

THE COMPETITOR GAP

BRAND	LEAD MESSAGE
Socialbooth	attract, engage, generate results + 51 reviews at 4.8, 70+ cases
Selfieboost	interactive photo/video/AI experiences for engagement and visibility
Say Cheese	creative studio; says outright it is not the cheapest — the only one with an identity

Nobody in the category owns emotion. Everybody owns "engagement." The only company in the scan that says what it is not — "Non siamo fornitori. Siamo parte del risultato del tuo evento." — is Socialbooth, and it keeps the line below the fold.

DIRECTION (DRAFT FROM THEIR OWN WORDS)

Positioning: "Bring emotion to life — and measure what it does for your brand." First half is their mission, unchanged; second half is the promise the homepage already makes. No competitor in the scan can say it: the feeling is the method, the numbers are the receipt.

Message order: promise (people play, laugh, remember) → mechanism (play is designed, not added) → proof (dwell time, contacts, reach per event, the way the Petronas case already does it: 1,100+ shots, 123,000+ people reached).

Offer by goal, not by product: group the 28 products under four event goals — Attract, Engage, Capture, Amplify. The products stay the same; the buyer chooses by what the event needs to do, which is the site's own advice.

FIRST 30 DAYS

01 Put "Bring emotion to life" in the homepage hero, "Non siamo fornitori" directly under it.

02 Add the four-line results block (shots, dwell, contacts, reach) to every new case history, starting from the Petronas format.

03 Fix the typos on the city pages and the case-archive tags; one spelling of the name everywhere; machine translation off by default.

04 Rebuild the services menu around the four goals; speak to agencies directly, with the reviews that already praise the team.

A paid Positioning Audit adds stakeholder sessions, access to analytics and enquiry data, and a read of which pages actually bring in revenue. This extract is from public material, built to show the method.

Want this kind of read on your brand? Positioning Audit — EUR 490, 1 week.
studiodudin.com/positioning-audit

Brand strategy built with the rigor of a luxury house — sized for where you are now.
Valentin Dudin · Milano